

Cellular respiration converts glucose into ATP through three stages.

Glycolysis occurs in the cytoplasm and yields two ATP per glucose molecule.

The electron transport chain uses oxygen as the final electron acceptor.